Theoretical presentations appear to be less popular than physical activities like ice-skating together or guided visits like Reims Cathedral, Cryotherapy Center or Sports University. It seems that action and concrete activities must have been more appreciated than a succession of video-projected presentations or conferences. We may also reckon that those activities have been those creating the most links and interactions between the students. Moreover, the latter highlight the benefits of such a project on language skills, especially in English. To put it in a nutshell, the purposes of moving to be healthy and of improving English skills have been successfully reached.
